Prepare both a one paragraph summary and a comprehensive description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

The Burgdorf House is located at 5750 Fisher Road in Temple Hills, Maryland. The dwelling is sited on a level, grassy 2 ½-acre lot. The property features mature trees and shrubs, as well as foundation plantings. An asphalt driveway enters the property from Fisher Road. The backyard is encompassed by a wooden privacy fence. A carport is attached to the east (side) elevation of the dwelling.

DWELLING

Constructed c. 1885, this two-and-one-half story, five-bay single dwelling is two bays deep. This Queen-Anne style dwelling has a T-shaped form. The western block is three bays wide while the eastern block is only two bays wide and not as deep. The wood-frame structure is clad in German wood siding. A wide belt course of square-butt wood shingles extends from the lintels of the first-story openings to the sills of the second-story openings. This belt course flares outward approximately four inches from the main block. The east (side) elevation and the eastern-half of the south (rear) elevation do not have this shingled belt course. The cross-gable roof is covered with asphalt shingles and features overhanging eaves, a raking wood cornice, and ogee-molded cornice returns. The upper-gable ends of the façade (north elevation), south (rear) elevation, and east (side) elevation feature a band of five rows of wooden shingles. Fenestration of this building consists of replacement, 1/1, double-hung, vinyl-sash windows with 9/9 false muntins. All of the window openings feature square-edge wood surrounds with plinth blocks, fluted architraves, beaded top rails, and ogee-molded lintels. Two interior brick chimneys pierce the ridge of the building. The westernmost chimney has a plain cap. The easternmost chimney has been extended, as evidenced by corbelling halfway up the exposed stack. According to the current home owner, Keatra Fuller, the dwelling originally had a wrap-around porch extending along the west (side) and south (rear) elevation.¹

The façade (north elevation) features a replacement, single-leaf, paneled wood door with oval light located in the second bay. The square-edge wood surround has a fluted architrave. A one-story, one-bay porch shelters the door opening. The porch was likely added to the building in the mid-twentieth century. The porch extends across the two blocks making up the dwelling. This porch has a front-gable roof covered with asphalt shingles. The roof includes overhanging eaves, a raking wood cornice, and German wood siding in the upper-gable end. The roof is supported by tapered, square wood posts. The porch is set on a solid, poured concrete foundation with concrete steps and finished with two wood rails serving as a balustrade. The first and second stories are pierced by four window openings. The upper-gable end of the front-facing western block contains a tripartite window opening. The central bay of this opening features a wide, 1/1, double-hung, vinyl-sash window with 6/6 false muntins. Flanking this window are two small, 1-light, wood-sash, fixed windows.

The south (rear) elevation is fenestrated by small, 1-light, wood-sash basement windows. The western block extends approximately four feet from the elevation of the eastern block. This permitted the placement of a single-leaf, paneled wood door with a single-light transom in the eastern elevation of the western block. Fenestration of the south elevation consists of paired windows with two exceptions. First, the westernmost bay of the first story is pierced by a tripartite window consisting of a large, single-light fixed window flanked by

1/1, double-hung, vinyl-sash windows with 4/4 false muntins. Second, the third bay of the elevation is fenestrated by single window openings on the first and second stories. The first-story opening is notably small, possibly illuminating a bathroom. The upper-gable end of the south elevation features a tripartite window opening similar to the façade. This opening contains a large central bay that has been enclosed with a louvered vent and flanked by single-leaf, fixed, wood-sash windows.

The west (side) elevation is fenestrated by a small window opening in the southernmost bay of the first story. The second story of the west elevation is pierced by two window openings placed close to the corner. The northernmost bay of the first story features a one-story, one-bay addition. Based on its form and materials, it is likely that this addition was constructed c. 1920. Set on a solid parged foundation, this wood-frame structure is clad in German wood siding. Limited wood corner boards are painted the same color as the exterior cladding. The side-gable roof is covered with asphalt shingles and features thin overhanging eaves, a boxed and raking wood cornice. The façade (north elevation) and south (rear) elevation are fenestrated by window openings smaller than found on the main block. These 1/1, double-hung, vinyl-sash windows have 6/6 false muntins and are set in plain, square-edge wood surrounds. The west (side) elevation contains a single-leaf, paneled vinyl door set in square-edge wood surround.

The east (side) elevation features a three-sided bay in the southernmost bay of the first story. This opening has an asphalt-shingle roof and paneled fields (spandrels) below each window opening. The bay is fenestrated with 1/1, double-hung, vinyl-sash windows with 6/6 false muntins. The openings have square-edge wood surrounds with plinth blocks, fluted architraves, beaded top rails, and ogee-molded lintels. The northern bay of the first story contains a single-leaf, paneled vinyl door with lights and a single-light, fixed transom, set in a square-edge wood surround. The second story is pierced by two window openings. The upper-gable end contains a tripartite window set in a square-edge wood surround. The central bay consists of an arched, 2/2, double-hung, wood-sash window flanked by small, quarter-round, fixed wood-sash windows. A one-story hyphen shelters the door opening on the first story, providing protection as one travels to the garage. The porch is set on a solid, parged foundation with a concrete deck and steps. Based on its form and materials, it appears that this hyphen was constructed in the mid-twentieth century. The side-gable roof is covered with asphalt shingles and supported by the same tapered, square posts found on the façade's porch. Two rails serve as a balustrade.

CARPORT

A one-story, wood-frame carport is located east of the Burgdorf House; it is attached to the dwelling via a small one-story, side-gable hyphen. Based on the structure's materials, it appears that this structure was constructed in the mid-twentieth century. The structure is set on a poured concrete slab. A one-story structure is capped by a steeply pitched, front-gable roof covered with asphalt shingles. The roof features a raking wood cornice and a plain wood fascia board. The upper-gable ends of the structure are clad in German wood siding. The property number (5750) has been attached to the façade (north elevation) of the carport. The roof is supported by large, square wood posts. These posts are set a solid, two-course, concrete-block wall. The concrete blocks are set on the poured concrete slab. The east (side), south (rear), and west (side) elevations of the carport features knee-high walls clad in German wood siding. The façade is open, having no door.

INTEGRITY

The Burgdorf House maintains a moderate level of integrity of design, workmanship, and materials as a result of the replacement of the original windows, removal of the original wrap-around porch, and its connection to the mid-twentieth-century garage by a hyphen. The exterior cladding is in fair condition, showing evidence of repair and replacement. The building, sited at the intersection of Fisher Road and Myrtle Avenue, maintains its integrity of location, setting, feeling, and association as a visual local landmark.

The carport, a later addition, maintains its integrity of design, materials, and workmanship. The building maintains a high level of integrity of feeling, location, setting, and association.

Overall, the Burgdorf House presents a moderate level of integrity.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Burgdorf House was constructed c. 1885 at 5750 Fisher Road in Temple Hills, Maryland, on the edge of a small ridge that slopes to the south. Predating the suburb of Temple Hills, the Burgdorf House was constructed on a 300-acre tract that Ernest Burgdorf had accumulated at the end of the nineteenth century. Burgdorf, owner of a livery stable in the District of Columbia, maintained the Prince George's County property as a horse farm, known as Seven Oaks Stock Farm. The property, subdivided to include just 14.41 acres by 1923, was first owner-occupied in 1925, when Henry G. Andre bought it. Andre, a carpenter by trade, was responsible for the subdivision of the surrounding acres into a working-class subdivision in the mid-twentieth century. Despite the subdivision and construction of mid- to late-twentieth-century houses, the Burgdorf House retains sufficient integrity to convey its significance as a late-nineteenth-century dwelling illustrating elements of the Queen Anne style.

HISTORIC CONTEXT

Temple Hills is located in western Prince George's County. The property was owned by Ernest Burgdorf. Burgdorf was born 1847 in Saxony, a state in present-day Germany. It is not known when he emigrated to America. Burgdorf and his wife, Lizzie, had two small children, Carl E. and Lena. It is certain that the dwelling had been constructed prior to the Burgdorf purchasing the property, though it cannot be determined the builder. The Burgdorfs did not live in the Burgdorf House, rather opting to reside in Washington, DC. and operate a livery stable at 416 Eighth Street, NW.² The size of this lot suggests that Burgdorf could have operated a small livery company in this location. Burgdorf made headlines when a team of his horses were stolen in 1890 by a rampant horse thief.³ Burgdorf purchased the 300-acre tract as a supplement to his livery business. The property was known as Seven Oaks Stock Farm. The farm featured many colts, some of which were used in the family's livery operation in Washington, DC.⁴

In addition to the 300-acre property, Ernest Burgdorf purchased parcels of land from influential and affluent Maryland families. For example, in 1889, he purchased property from Sylvester B. and William W. Boarman for $9,000.⁵ Sylvester B. Boarman was a bank officer, his son William W. Boarman a lawyer, another son was a doctor, and his third son worked in banking.

Continuation Sheet

In 1919, Burgdorf sold approximately 316 acres James M. Beall.⁶ Beall and his wife Nora, both born in 1874, lived in Washington, DC, with their young daughter, Florence. The Bealls, like many living in urban communities, rented rooms to two lodgers and had a personal cook. Beall was a grocer, who supplemented his income by leasing the Burgdorf House property.⁷

In 1923, 14.41 acres of the 316-acre tract including the dwelling were conveyed to Thomas S. Wheeler.⁸ At the time of the sale, the widowed Wheeler lived in Charles County. In 1925, Wheeler sold the property to Henry G. Andre and his wife, Myrtle B. Andre.⁹ Andre, born 1881, was a house carpenter. The Andres had three young children when they purchased the Prince George's County property. It is believed that the Andres family was the first owner to occupy the Burgdorf House.

In 1952, Myrtle B. Andre, widowed, conveyed the property to Colonel James M. and Eleanor J. Clow.¹⁰ The deed of sale refers to the property as Lot D in the "Addition to Andre Subdivision," thus suggesting Henry and Myrtle Andre were responsible for subdividing the larger tract into individual building lots. Like the Andre family, the Clows resided in the house. Colonel Clow served in the military, as did his son, Gordon H. Clow. In 1986, the Clows conveyed the property to Robert Lee Neal, Jr.¹¹ Robert Neal and his wife, Beverly, lived in the house until 2004 when they sold to Raymond W. Bush, Jr.¹² At the time of the sale, the property was designated as Lot 16 in the Addition to Andre Subdivision. Information about Bush could not be located.

In 2007, Bush conveyed the property to Carolyn Childs.¹³ Wells Fargo Bank, acting as trustee of the mortgage company, sold the property to the current owners, Keatra Fuller and Gail Avent in March of 2008.¹⁴
